Dear Mr. Sample:

Businesses have come to realize that the key to survival and growth is focusing on their customers. Decreased customer loyalty and global competition make it imperative that organizations build strong customer relationships.

That's why one of the emerging trends of the '90s is a shift to ~~customer-driven business strategies. To remain competitive, you~~ need to:

- Identify and capture information on your customers' changing needs
- Provide information to your people whenever and wherever they need it so they can better service your customers
- Respond faster than your competition

Find out how business solutions that leverage distributed information about your customers will give you the competitive edge. Attend a free, thought-provoking half-day seminar sponsored by AT&T/NCR and Oracle.
